About the Artist

Brittney S. Price is a Los Angeles-based fine artist and muralist whose work sparks dialogue around identity, justice, and human connection. Guided by the Sankofa Adinkra symbol, her art reflects on the past to inspire progress.

Through her murals and fine art, Price explores resilience, community, and social change, drawing from her experience as a Black American woman. Her creations have been featured at the Palm Springs Art Museum, on the historic Great Wall of Los Angeles, and in public spaces nationwide.

From collaborating with major institutions like Target and HBO Max to leading workshops and mentoring young artists, Price's work bridges communities and fosters meaningful conversations. Recently recognized by Los Angeles County for her contributions to public art and social justice, she continues to create transformative art that inspires healing and change.
